INTRODUCTION

A History of St. Mogue's, Ballycanew

St. Mogue's Church of Ireland in the parish of Ballycanew, County Wexford, is the oldest extant church edifice in the Diocese of Ferns, and indeed, is among the oldest Protestant churches still in use in Ireland. Although the date of its erection remains unknown, it probably dates to the first quarter of the 18th century. Built in a traditional cruciform shape, its arched neoclassical windows reflect an Irish vernacular adaptation of the style made popular at the time by Sir Christopher Wren. Constructed of wood with a facade of stone, it has recently undergone an extensive restoration that included covering its walls with a stone-like exterior. It contains no monuments of great antiquity, and the earliest memorial inscriptions in the churchyard date to the mid 18th century.

Centrally located on a small hill in the village, St. Mogue's was probably built on a more ancient site of religious worship. P. H. Hore remarked that the present church "is said to occupy the site of the ancient one, but every remain of antiquity has long since disappeared from this locality."¹ The Norman family of Neville, who occupied the parish from the 14th through 16th centuries, may have used the site for a chapel, although there are no surviving documents to support this contention.² James Leslie notes that the Ballycanew rectory was part of the corps of the Ferns treasurer as early as 1409, which would seem to indicate that a church had been erected. By 1613, St. Mogue's had become a Protestant chapel, and a visitation book from that year indicated that it had "a Common Prayer Book provided."³

The earliest known clergyman to serve the parish was Daniel Murphy, an Irishman, who was curate in 1613 and was listed as "a reading minister." By 1675, the parish was under the care of the Reverend Theophilus Williams, the licenced curate of Killulkelog, Killemehek, Kilrush, Mullymokin (Monomolin), Kilcavan and Ballycannoo. Nothing is known of Williams, and his tenure may have been brief. Within three years the parish was under the care of the Reverend William Burrell, curate of Christ Church, Grey, who also served the parishes of Kilnehue, Kilcavan, Ballycanew, Mullomoling (Monomolin), and Kiltrisk. He had metriculated at Queen's College, Cambridge and received his orders in London in 1672. His service in Ireland was also brief, and by 1680 he had become rector of Great Parndon in Essex.⁴ He died in 1704 at the age of 57 and was buried at Morden.

The history of St. Mogue's at the close of the 17th century remains obscure. The rectorship of Ballycanew became part of the duties of the diocesan treasurer, while a curate was appointed specifically for Ballycanew and Kiltrisk. Burrell was succeeded at Gorey by the Reverends Thomas Graves and William Moore, neither of whom apparently remained longer than a year. Nothing is known of their successors until well into the 18th century.

The earliest known clergyman to serve as rector was James Harvey, who was also appointed diocesan treasurer before 1720. Born at Killiane Castle, County Wexford in 1676, he had entered Trinity College in 1699 and had received his Master of Arts degree by 1707. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1709, and in 1720 was named curate of Killenagh, next of Ballycanew. St. Mogue's became one of several parishes Harvey served, but his activities specifically there remain unknown. He is listed as a pew holder in the parish in 1760, indicating that his role as a clergyman there may not have been an active one. Several curates served the church under his care, among them Edward Langford, who also served Mullomoling, Kiltrisk, and Killinick. He seems to have remained only through 1730, for the following year he was named curate of Gowran in the Diocese of Ossory.

By 1760, another curate, the Reverend Humphrey Hartley, had assumed the reins of the parish, but the date of his arrival is not known. Hartley had been born at Balloghan, County Carlow in 1711, a son of the Reverend William Hartley. Educated first by the Reverend Harffinch Piggott of New Ross, he later entered Trinity College in 1730 and received his Master's Degree by 1739. He was curate of Edermine in County Wexford in 1735 and may have been curate of several parishes concurrently. In 1739, an act of Council united the parishes of Ballycanew, Leskinfere, Mullamoling and Kiltrisk, and Hartley may have taken over the care of all four parishes soon after this date. He was certainly in Ballycanew before 1760, when he presided at the reassignment of pews on New Year's Day of that year. An active land holder, he appears frequently in the surviving leases for the village and maintained an estate at Tomgarr in the parish. He resigned his post due to frail health in 1780 and presumably died soon after, leaving a wife, Honor, and three sons.

James Harvey died in 1760, leaving vacant both the rectorship and the diocesan treasurer's post. The position fell next to the Reverend George Allen, another Wexford native. Born in the city of Wexford in 1711, he had entered Trinity College in 1729 and was there at the same time as Hartley. On being named treasurer of Ferns, he also spent time in his role as rector of Ballycanew and Kiltrisk. He presided at the vestry of 1761, of which only an abstract survives. He remained in office until his death in 1776, and his tombstone in Leskinfere churchyard described him as "Rector of the Union of Ballycanew."

Allen's successor, the Reverend Wensly Bond, had the longest term in office of any of his predecessors. The son of a Presbyterian minister of Corboy, County Longford, he had entered Trinity College in 1761 at the age of 16. He received both a Bachelor's and a Master's Degree, and later attended Magdalen College, Oxford. Afterward, he was appointed Dean of Ross in 1773, and three years later was elevated to Ferns treasurer and rector of Ballycanew, Mullomoling, and Leskinfere.

Bond presided only irregularly at Ballycanew's vestry. He took little interest in collecting the parish cess, leaving this duty to his curates. He appeared usually to adjudicate in special parish matters, such as pew assignments and determining the need for church repairs. Hence, in 1802, he responded to a complaint that "many of the Inhabitants of Ballycanow and Kiltrisk, paying the parish cess, are not accomodated with pews in this Church, while other persons and families not living in either parish nor paying any parish cess occupy pews which they alledge to have a right to." He appears to have been fair-minded and usually sided with those parishioners who paid their cess and demanded pews.

Several curates served St. Mogue's under Bond's rectorship. When Humphrey Hartley retired at the end of 1780, he was succeeded by the Reverend Andrew Little, whose background is not known. He may have been related to Simon Little, who served as parish clerk. Almost nothing is known of Little's tenure in the parish; he seems to have been advanced in age at the time of his arrival in 1781. He continued the familiar admonishment of nonparishioners to pay the parish cess, or otherwise risk losing their pews, and he seems to have enjoyed considerable popularity. When he retired on July 23, 1792, the parish passed the following resolution:

Influenced by the humane, pious and unwearied Attention which has ever been zealously employed in discharging the important Duties of your Sacred Office, and likewise by the very honourable and trustworthy Disposal of such Monies as have at any Times been raised for the Parish Purposes, We the undernamed Protestant Parishioners of the above Union beg Leave to testify to you our sincere and un feigned Approbation of your Conduct hoping that you may long live happy to enjoy among us the Reverence and love which is equally due to your amiable private character as to your Public Virtue. Ballycanew July 18th.

The document was published in the Wexford Herald. Little responded that the resolution was unexpected. "This friendly and unsolicited Testimony of your Approbation . . . makes me happy; my Heart feels it and thanks you for it, it will sooth the rugged and untrodden Part of my Journey through Life, which must needs be soon finished."⁶ By the end of 1792 he had apparently departed from the parish.

The 1790s were a time of tumult in County Wexford for both the Catholic and Protestant populations, and the membership of St. Mogue's was not unaffected. The events of revolutionary France prompted an increase in United Irish activity in Ireland, leading many Protestants to feel increased anxiety. In November, 1792, a group of Protestants, meeting at the Crown and Anchor Tavern in London, passed a series of resolutions in response to what they perceived was the growing danger to the public peace "by the circulating of mischievous opinions," including the so-called Rights of Man, which threatened, in their view, the authority of Parliament.

Many of Wexford's gentry were anxious to secure the loyalty of the Protestant population in the wake of the Crown and Anchor resolutions, and the pressure was felt at Ballycanew. Some of St. Mogue's parishioners were apparently members of the Ballycanew Social Harrier Hunt, a fox hunting club with loyalist sympathies. At the urging of Hawtrey White, an intensely bigoted officer in the Yeomanry Corps with a strong antipathy for the native population, the club expressed in January, 1793 its "loyalty to their most gracious king and attachment to the constitution," and offered the members' "sincere and fervent prayers that he may long continue to reign over a free and happy people." In acknowledging the resolutions of London, the members expressed their desire to "recommend them the serious perusal and attention of our countrymen, as an anecdote to the many poisonous Publications dispersed with such wicked industry over the kingdom."⁸

The minutes of St. Mogue's vestry are lost for most of the 1790s, so the level of anxiety within the congregation remains unknown, if indeed it was even expressed at the vestry. Whether the above resolution was coerced or reflected the genuine sentiment of the bulk of the parish inhabitants is also unclear. County Wexford had been influenced to some degree by the goals of the Volunteers of a decade before. In 1793 James Beaty, a millowner and parishioner, donated a tract of land next to St. Mogue's to the Roman Catholics of the parish for the construction of a chapel, an act which reflected some degree of altruism and cooperation.⁹ Lord Mount Norris was also known to be liberal with respect to Catholic toleration, so long as freedom of worship did not lead to revolution.

Arthur Colley assumed the post of curate as Andrew Little's successor late in 1792, amid this climate of fear and uncertainty. He had spent most of his life in Ballycanew and knew the people better than his predecessors. Born on the townland of Bellcarrigg in 1762, his father, Roger Colley, had been a local farmer and pew holder, and at the time of his death in 1784 had left his son with a lease to a substantial farm. Nothing is known of Colley's education, although he seems to have been devoted to the welfare of his native parish. In his hand are written most of the vestry minutes which follow. He is joined frequently in the records by his brother-in-law, Christopher Harrison, who had married his sister Patience.

Ballycanew stood in the center of conflict during the Rebellion of 1798. Father Michael Murphy rallied his supporters from the Catholic chapel next to St. Mogue's, despite his congregation's pledge of loyalty to Lord Mount Norris in the spring of that year. A significant amount of firing occurred between British troops and the Catholic army near the parish, and several houses in the parish, Catholic and Protestant, were destroyed. Also burned was the Catholic chapel, although a portion of a wall that withstood the blaze was later incorporated into the Wesleyan chapel that was constructed later on the same site.¹⁰ Wensly Bond reported losses totaling 328 Irish pounds sterling, including his "house and offices, clothes, a gun, wine and spirits." Arthur Colley's losses were less significant, including "cattle, cloaths, provision, wine, and houses" totaling 83 pounds. Others in the parish reported even larger losses.¹¹

St. Mogue's itself was not apparently burned during the disturbances as was the Church of Ireland at Ferns. It did suffer from looting, however, and the parish register was stolen and presumed destroyed. Fragments of the shredded vestry book were recovered, and Colley recorded the loss of the remainder in a notation in the new book.

The appearance of the church at this time remains unknown. The only description from the period came from a visitor in 1790, who wrote in Walker's Hibernian Magazine:

I then rode . . . next to Ballicanow, a village, with a church, the yard of which being well planted with trees, gives the village a handsome appearance: near this is Nevills-court, the seat of Mr. Jones; opposite the front is a fish-pond, that supplies a boulting-mill kept by a Mr. Beatty.¹²

The interior of the church was plain and included only a pulpit, altar, reading desk, and baptismal font. The original pews were evidently of the box style, and their upkeep was the responsibility of their owners. Of these fixtures, all but the font were replaced in the mid 19th century.

St. Mogue's congregation continued to grow in the early 19th century, and many parishioners were left without seats. Other pews were handed down through generations of families who were not parish residents. The amount of cess or tax collected by the parish also continued to increase, ranging from a total of 5 pounds in 1761 to 65 pounds (six pence per acre) by 1815. In 1807 the parish was required by law to support a local militia, contributing a sufficient sum to support five substitute volunteers. More than 43 pounds were raised, which was substantial for the village but far less than neighboring parishes. (The contribution of Christ Church, Gorey was more than 113 pounds).

Wensly Bond took a strong interest in local affairs. When the dry goods store of James Floyd suffered a burglary of cloth and silk in 1813, he was among those townspeople pledging a reward for the capture of the thieves.¹³ He remained in office until his death in 1820, laboring at the end of his life to raise money for St. Mogue's renovation.

Colley remained curate through 1823, when he was named precentor for Leighlin and prebendary of Coulstiffe. He had several children, among them a son Arthur Junior who became a curate in Wexford. The elder Colley died in 1838 at his house at Belcarkigg after more than thirty years of service in the parish.

The composition of St. Mogue's continued to change in the 19th century. Some families moved to America and Canada; new families arrived. The Wesleyan movement was particularly strong in Ballycanew and influenced many parishioners of long standing, including the Johnsons, Tackaberrys, and Taylors, to join the new church. Fossey Tackaberry, baptized in the parish in 1796, became a leading Methodist clergyman in Ireland. The administration of the church also continued to change, and in 1859 a perpetual curacy was established.

St. Mogue's continues to stand at this writing, altered in appearance somewhat from what it had been in the 18th and 19th centuries. Within the last several years it was renovated with a new cement-like exterior. The old churchyard has also undergone restoration. Currently the parish is served by the rector of Christ Church, Gorey, who also acts as the incumbent for Leskinfere. St. Mogue's continues to draw a small group of stalwart members from a radius of several miles surrounding the village of Ballycanew.

The Vestry

The vestry minutes included in this work provide a glimpse of the operation of small village Church of Ireland in County Wexford during the late 18th and early 19th centuries. The records are valuable not only because they exist (when those of many other parishes have not survived), but also because they are ordinary and without pretention. They reveal much about the structure of the church and the strata of society who supported it.

As was stated above, Ballycanew became part of the union of Mullomoling, Kiltrisk, and Millenagh in 1736. By 1760, however, the union included only Kiltrisk. The rector of the parish served several other parishes concurrently and was also diocesan treasurer. Beneath him was the curate, who held responsibility for the weekly operation of the parish, conducting services and making entries in the parish register. He was paid from a stipend granted from the diocese, although the parish was responsible for the salaries of a parish clerk and sexton.

Ballycanew had what was termed a general or common vestry, rather than a representative vestry. Instead of being elected by the parishioners, it was comprised loosely of the parishioners themselves, who came together in an open setting to discuss the matters of the church. Meetings, also known as vestries, were held infrequently - always on Easter Tuesday and only irregularly on other occasions. The principal focus of the vestry was to elect churchwardens for the ensuing year and to determine the amount of cess or tax to be raised upon the acreage of every parishioner.

The office of churchwarden was not a coveted one in Ballycanew, and service in the post became a matter of duty rather than choice. The principal responsibility of the office was to collect the parish cess and present it to the curate within a year. The rector did not permit anyone to serve in the office twice; once one had completed a year's duty, he was not asked to serve again. Thus, in 1813, Samuel Hollinsworth was appointed churchwarden "provided that he did not serve as church warden before." Paying the cess was not popular with local residents, and the increasing resentment toward the collectors made the churchwarden disliked.

The vestry also appointed apploters for the parish, who would determine the amount of cess to be paid by each resident. This post carried more prestige, and there were no limits imposed on length of service. The curate reserved the two posts for trusted parishioners, usually those having some means and literacy skills. James Beaty, Patt Cranwill, Christopher Harrison, and John Jones held the posts most frequently and were among the most prosperous in the parish of its middle class.

Participation in the affairs of St. Mogue's was limited to this middle strata of Protestant society. Lord Mount Norris played no role in its governance, except to present a gift of 35 pounds to buy plate in 1815. Large local landowners such as George Ogie, Roger Lyndon, William Clifford, and Thomas Colley were also exempt in deference to their station, although Lyndon and Colley both had pews, and Ogie was permitted to bury his wife in a place of honor directly behind the church.

The reason behind this exemption is unclear; it resulted from no apparent written rule. The men who gathered in the church for vestry tended to elect men of their own station as churchwardens. James Beaty was a mill owner; John Jones a prominent farmer; Leonard Bennett a saddler; James Floyd a shopkeeper; Christopher Harrison, Thomas Godkin and William Hawkins, tanners; Samuel and Nicholas Hollinsworth, farmers; James Jones, a silversmith. Charles Foley of Kiltrisk, a churchwarden in 1777, and Robert Harden of Cranacroure, a churchwarden in 1804, were both illiterate and signed their names with marks. Others may have been literate enough only to sign their names. Few barriers existed within this class, and new men of humble beginnings could pass into it fluidly. Church government did not exclude them; indeed, it drafted a variety of men into its service.

Neither the churchwardens nor the parishioners played any role in determining worship style or church liturgy. These were left solely to the domain of the rector and bishop, taking direction from Canterbury. Preaching was strictly regulated, and the officiating clergyman could give sermons only by reading from one of several authorized texts. Communion was administered only on holy days and seldom at other times. Some churches had choirs and soloists beginning in the mid-18th century, but St. Mogue's apparently had no musical offering whatever until 1801, when Mrs. Mary Patchell was paid £1.2.9 for singing at Easter.

St. Mogue's, Ballycanew was a small, provincial church, with few of the amenities of its larger sister parishes at Gorey and Ferns. Even with the prayerbook, its services were austere and plain to more modern tastes. Sabbath-keeping was strongly encouraged, yet the church could not provide enough pews for those who wished to attend on Sundays. It was also a place, moreover, which offered a small measure of democracy to a group of mid-level farmers and merchants who were otherwise largely excluded from the political system.

About the Records

I have attempted in the following work to provide an exact transcript of the St. Mogue's vestry minute book which is housed in the church vault at Ballycanew. I have maintained original punctuation and spellings in nearly all instances, the only change being the substitution of the word "and" for "&" whenever it occurred in order to achieve greater legibility and ease in reading. I have also had to change the order of the book. When rebels tore the pages out of the original book during the Rebellion, a few leaves were recovered and sewn into a new volume. Most of these were restored out of sequence, which forced me to impose a chronological order upon them that differs from the order of the original volume.

I have taken considerably more liberty with the parish register, sections of which are nearly illegible and incomprehensible in the original volume. The earliest parish register included the records of Ballycanew, Kiltrisk, Killenagh, Monomolin, and Leskinfere. The curate often entered baptisms and burials on a single register page; at other times he would scatter these events over several pages out of sequence. To enhance their utility for the genealogist, I have placed them in a chronological sequence. The early dates are left in the old calendar style as they were originally written.

Following the transcription I have included a facsimile of the actual text of the vestry book. The signatures of the parishioners have artifact value and may help researchers distinguish persons of the same name who appear in other records. It is my hope that this work will be of benefit to researchers interested in the families of Ballycanew Parish in the 18th and early 19th centuries. It is also my hope that this volume will be the first of several to appear for northern County Wexford.

Acknowledgements

There are several persons who should be thanked for helping in the preparation of this work. I am deeply grateful to the Reverend Philip Knowles, rector of Christ Church, Gorey and the present incumbent of Ballycanew, for making these records available and giving me permission to transcribe them. I am also indebted to my friend Steven Myers, who copied the book in a painstaking manner. I am grateful to my friend Brian Cleary of Wexford for sharing his expertise on Protestants in Wexford and for providing the valuable reference to the Ballycanew Social Harrier Hunt. Finally, I am indebted to Kevin Whelan of Dublin for sharing his inexhaustible expertise on County Wexford in the 18th century.

Ballycanow Church, May 11th, 1802

At A Vestry duly notified and held here this day it was Resolved that the sum of twenty one pounds thirteen shillings and four pence voted by the late act of vestry of 19 April 1802 has been justly and fairly applotted by Patt. Cranwill and Jas. Beatty, applotters for the united parishes of Ballycanow and Kiltrisk by a cess of two pence be the acre as by their return given in to this vestry and we hereby approve of and confirm the same and

Whereas Complaint has been made at several Vestries in this Church that many of the Inhabitants of the united parishes of Ballycanow and Kiltrisk paying parish cess are not accomodated with pews in this Church while other persons and families not living in either parish nor paying any parish cess occupy pews which they alledge they have a right to, and

Whereas it appeared to be the Unanimous sense of the parishioners in Vestry assembled on 19 April 1802 that this question be taken up by the ensuing Vestry to be held for the applotting of the cess then voted and agreed to and public notice thereof was posted on the door of this Church yard

Now in order to proceed in this business with proper and due caution it is hereby resolved that a case be prepared by the minister and Church Wardens with such assistance as they shall think necessary to call in and laid before Doctor Duigman, Vicar General of the Diocese of Ferns for his opinion and directions inthe final adjustment of this question. Church of Ballycanow, August 19th 1806

At a Vestry duly notified and held here this day for the purpose of taking into consideration the the expediency or inexpediency of performing a vote for altering the present form of the Church, in order to have such alterations, if quoted, laid before the Bishop of the Diocese for his Lordship's approbation. And of such alterations shall be deemed by this Vestry inexpedient in such case for the purpose of considering what repairs are judged to be now [illegible] of the Church in its present form, and if the assessment already made this year for repairs shall be judged insufficient in such latter case that a [illegible] this sum be accessed in aid of that already laid on at our last Vestry as a proper and sufficient provision for such necessary Repairs.

Resolved by this Vestry that it is not expedient to make any alteration in the form of the building of this Church.

Resolved by the majority of the Protestant Parishioners assembled that the sum of ten pounds sixteen shillings and eight pence is accessed on the Parishes of Ballycanow and Kiltrisk in aid of the sum laid on by Act of Vestry of the 7 of last April and levied by the Church Wardens and applied to the Repairing of this Church.

PART II: PARISH REGISTER

[The parish register of St. Mogue's, Ballycanew exists in two parts. The first of these is comprised of several fragments of the original parish register, which was destroyed during the Rebellion of 1798. The few pages to survive were sewn into the vestry minute book subsequent to this date. There seem to have been three separate lists of baptisms, one for Ballycanew and the others for Killenagh and Leskinfere, which were kept concurrently. A separate parish register, fully intact, was begun in the fall of 1798 and was maintained at the back of the old vestry minute book. In 1811, it was replaced by a folio parish register.]
